The Kingham Collective Announces Availability of Audiology Assistant Training Online

Advancing the training of Audiology Assistants

Mill Creek, WA: Today, The Kingham Collective, a company focused on the advancement and training of Audiology Assistants in the Audiology community, announced that they have released their newest product, Audiology Assistant Training Online, which was developed to give the industry another tool to train the growing role of Audiology Assistant or Audiology Technician.

“By offering different subject choices in the online training, we find it’s a lot easier for practices and clinics to find the right fit for training to their exact needs. There is no guessing of what the assistant will be learning and we have full confidence that a well-educated assistant will improve the efficiency of any practice.” said Joe Furness, President at The Kingham Collective.

Customers and partners have given thumbs up to the new release. “This is a well thought out and complete training guide for Audiology Assistants.” said Kevin St Clergy, Partner at Medical Practice Builders (www.MedPB.com).

“This knowledge is amazing. Not only was I learning about how to become a professional in the field of Audiology, I also saw myself aligning my business knowledge in a profound way to helping others with hearing loss.” said Josh Hopp, Audiology Assistant trainee.

The training site AudiologyAcademy.com has been tested for functionality in offering the new training online. New and past customers can automatically create an account online and begin the training process.
